ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to express my deep debt of gratitude to Dr. V. Raghavan, Professor of Sanskrit, University of Madras, for arranging for the publication of the work with the Adyar Library and for his valuable suggestions which I always accepted with thanks.

I am greatly indebted to Dr. K. Kunjinni Raja, Reader in Sanskrit, University of Madras, for helping in editing the book and also reading the proofs.

I am also very grateful to Mr. K. Parameswara Aithal, Pandit in the Adyar Library, for checking all the references and seeing the book through the Press. I know that he has put in a good deal of work in proof-reading and checking up references and am extremely thankful to him for his help.

It is my pleasant duty to express also my sincere thanks to the Adyar Library and Research Centre for undertaking the publication of the work in its well-known Adyar Library Series.

Finally I wish to express my gratefulness to Srimati Radha Burnier, Joint Director, for additional help in editing the work and seeing the proofs; and to Srimati Seetha Neelakantan, the Librarian at the Adyar Library and Research Centre for her kind and helpful co-operation.

LUDWIK STERNBACH, LL.D.

A. INTRODUCTION

CĀṆAKYA—VIṢṆUGUPTA—KAUṬILYA

1. *Vātsyāyane mallanāgaḥ kauṭilyaś caṇakātmajaḥ
drāmilaḥ pakṣilasvāmī viṣṇugupto 'ṅgulaś ca saḥ.*¹

These are the names under which one of the greatest celebrities of India was known—Cāṇakya, the Brāhmaṇa from Takṣaśilā, the minister of king Candragupta Maurya and the master of polity. He was Vātsyāyana—the author of Kāmasūtra,² Mallanāga—the driver, the leader in battle, Kauṭilya—the politician,³ Cāṇakya—the moralist, Drāvila,⁴ Pakṣila—the logician, Viṣṇugupta—the astronomer, and Aṅgula—the mathematician.⁵

¹ Hemacandra in his Abhidhānacintāmaṇi, ed. by O. Böhtlingk and Ch. Rieu, St. Petersburg, 1847, vv. 853-4.

² See R. Shama Sastry, 'A Note on the Supposed Identity of Vātsyāyana and Kauṭilya', The Quarterly Journal of the Mythic Society, 7, pp. 210-6; H. C. Chakladar, Social Life in Ancient India, 1954, p. 24.

³ Or Kauṭalya from the name of the gotra.

⁴ The text has however drāmila, an inhabitant of Southern India.

⁵ Trikāṇḍaśeṣa, ed. by Narayana Sinha, Benares, 1844, p. 33, vv. 82-3 reads: viṣṇuguptas tu kauṇḍinyaḥ (for Kauṭilya [Sārāthacandrikā comm.]) . . . aṃśulaḥ (for aṅgulaḥ [Sārāthacandrikā comm.]).

2. Next to the heroes of the epics and the Purāṇa-s no name was more familiar to Indians than that of Cāṇakya. The very fact that almost universal adoration was paid to his memory shows that Cāṇakya was regarded in his own days as a master whose worldly wisdom and foresight had gained for him the veneration of his contemporaries. Their reverence has been transmitted from one generation to another and his real history having been forgotten, tradition has surrounded his name with a halo of intellectual glow that has marked him out for the spontaneous veneration of posterity, not only in India, but also in the ancient world outside.¹

3. Among the Purāṇa-s, the Viṣṇu-purāṇa preserved the tradition that Kauṭilya had destroyed the Nanda-s and through his diplomacy had put Candragupta Maurya on the throne.² The *Mudrārākṣasa*³ and the Cāṇakya-kathā are also devoted to this story. The most prominent character in these works, Cāṇakya, is represented as a clear-headed, self-confident, intriguing, hard politician, with the ultimate end of his ambition thoroughly well-determined, and directing all his clear-headedness and intrigue to the accomplishment of that end. As such he is depicted in the Mudrārākṣasa rather as kuṭīla—crooked—than as a moralist. Probably that is why not a single one of the 2438 aphorisms and maxims in the various collections attributed to Cāṇakya can be found in the whole of the Mudrārākṣasa.¹

4. From most ancient times Cāṇakya—Viṣṇugupta—Kauṭilya has been credited with the composition of a work on Arthaśāstra. We also find Kauṭilya's name as a writer on polity in Jain and Buddhist tradition.² Kāmandaki in his Nītisāra made a reverential mention of Cāṇakya whom he called by his own name—Viṣṇugupta. He said: Salutation to the highly intelligent Viṣṇugupta who sprang from an extensive and illustrious dynasty, the descendants of which lived like ṛṣi-s accepting alms from nobody; to him whose renown became world-wide; to him who was effulgent like the highly blazing fire; to that most artful and cunning one, the foremost of those conversant with Paramārtha, who mastered the four Veda-s, as if they were only one—salutations to that one whose fire of energy was like the flash of lightning, and through whose magical powers that resembled in potency and in fury the thunderbolt, the renowned, powerful and mountain-like dynasty of Nanda was eradicated for good. Salutations to him who resembled the god Śaktidhara himself in prowess and who, single-handed,

¹ Probably with the exception of one beginning with the words patim tyaktvā (6. 6). In two of the CnT MSS., there is a stanza beginning with the same words (CnT II 23.10 and CnT III 57.4). Cf. CKr, pp. 104-5.

² N. C. Banerjee, op. cit., p. 4.

by means of his mantraśakti and utsāhaśakti, brought the entire earth under the thorough control of Candragupta. Salutation to that wisest of counsellors who collated the nectar-like Nitiśāstra-s from the mighty ocean of the Arthaśāstra-s.¹

5. Later, authors on nīti and kathā literature repeatedly cited Cāṇakya's or Kauṭilya's name in connection with his mastery of the science of polity, as also did the Pañcatantra (Tantrākhyāyikā), Daṇḍin in his Daśakumāracarita,² and the Purāṇa-s.³ He was also mentioned in other works, such as Bāṇa's Kādambarī, Hemacandra's Parīśiṣṭaparvan, Varāhamihira's Bṛhat-saṃhitā, Somadeva's Nītivākyāmrta, the Kathāsaritsāgara, and the Cāṇakyakathā, by Kṣemendra and by many other ancient Indian authors. Cāṇakya was universally looked upon as one of the greatest authorities on the science of polity,⁴ morals and ethics⁵ and even as an author on medicine.⁶

COLLECTIONS OF MAXIMS, THEIR CONTENTS AND AUTHORSHIP

the nectar of the Nītiśāstra,¹ Kāmandaki probably meant to say that Viṣṇugupta had extracted from the textbook of Arthaśāstra the moral sayings on nīti, Cāṇakya's famous aphorisms and maxims with a moral and ethical background.²

7. Collections of these maxims are generally known as rājanītiśāstra, or rājanītisamuccaya, or epitomes of polity, although they do not contain now many aphorisms dealing with rāja-nīti.

Many texts of collections of Cāṇakya's maxims open with the introductory stanza, beginning with the words praṇamya śirasā viṣṇum. The second half of this stanza promises to deal with rājanītisamuccaya. The reader will be however sorely disappointed in finding anything of a like nature.³ Nevertheless 'Nīti maintains its place as an element of equal rank [with the epos, Purāṇa-s, etc.] and need not fear obscurity by comparison with other brilliant lights'.⁴ Sometimes whole chapters are devoted to nīti,⁵ but in some texts containing Cāṇakya's maxims the number of stanzas which can be assigned to nīti is negligible.⁶ It is most likely that the original collections of maxims known today as the work of Cāṇakya contained a choice of maxims from a treatise on polity attributed to Cāṇakya, to which at a later date, other maxims and aphorisms, not necessarily connected with polity but with other subjects, in particular morals and ethics, were successively added.¹ Political topics receded, moral and ethical became prominent.² With the passage of years, the word rāja-nīti probably lost its meaning of kingship and government and acquired the connotation of excellent, noble behaviour, not technically royal, but still moral.³ The term rāja-nīti was, in any case, not meaningless, since the maxims and aphorisms contained in Cāṇakya collections contain moral and ethical maxims which could be meant for the guidance of kings in the performance of their duties, though they should be profitably followed by all men in their dealings with others in the conduct of worldly affairs.⁴ This seems even more true if we compare our Cāṇakya collections with the Burmese Nītiśāstra-s⁵ (the Loka-nīti, Rājanīti, Dhammanīti, Suttavaḍḍhananīti and Nīti Kyan) which borrowed extensively from Cāṇakya.

² It is also possible that Kāmandaki simply meant that he had extracted the book on political science, now known under the name of Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra.

collections. While the maxims in Cāṇakya collections apply to human beings and human affairs in general, they refer in the Burmese sources to the king; nara was changed there to rāja. Thus maxims dealing with qualities of certain animals which should be imitated by men (in some Cāṇakya versions), are recommended for imitation by kings in the Burmese texts. Several such examples have been found.¹

8. Indian writers have mastered the art of didactic and gnomic poetry and acquired complete facility in expressing their thoughts with conciseness and originality through a variety of literary media the more typical of which were similes and metaphors; the thoughts were expressed with precision and were often rendered in the form of paradoxes. These general thoughts, turned into truth drawn on wisdom and experience, were condensed into aphorisms, maxims, sayings, adages, and proverbs. They often appeared in India in such literary works as tales, epics, dramas, novels and Dharmaśāstra-s, but most of all in special collections of maxims and aphorisms—the Subhāṣita-saṃgraha-s, a literary form to which Indians took a particular liking. One of the most famous collections of aphorisms and maxims is that attributed to Cāṇakya. This collection, or better to say collections of maxims and aphorisms, is known to exist in different forms and under different titles. It is also one of the richest and finest collections of the gnostic Sanskrit literature.

In addition to rāja-nīti these collections contain a primer of principles of morality of high ethical value, many of which are generally accepted not only in India, but all over the world. They deal with a variety of ethical and religious topics, with the worldly wisdom of Indians, with their savoir-vivre, with intercourse among men, general reflections on richness and poverty, fate and human effort, women, as well as with the conduct of life of the Indians, with their daily work, daily sorrows and daily pleasures, not excluding such topics as eating and drinking. Consequently, the collections of Cāṇakya aphorisms and maxims, deal with a variety of topics, included often in a haphazard way, a characteristic feature of all Subhāṣita-saṃgraha-s. As a rule stanzas are not connected by any bond of thought; each stanza is normally complete in itself, although there are exceptions. Quite often we find a pair of verses on the same subject, and sometimes several verses deal with the same subject, such as women, different kinds of Brāhmaṇa-s, things to be learnt from animals: the lion, the heron, the cock, the crow, the dog, the donkey, etc.¹

Probably the collections of Cāṇakya maxims possess a fairly old traditional nucleus;¹ they belong neither to nīti proper, nor to kāvya proper; many of these maxims and aphorisms can be identified in other works of Indian literature, in particular the epics, Purāṇa-s, Dharmaśāstra-s, kāvya and kathā literature and many can be found also in other Subhāṣita-saṃgraha-s. This identity of aphorisms and maxims does not imply direct borrowing one from the other, in view of the fact that the floating mass of oral tradition may have served as a common depositary for the borrowing.² Many collections attributed to Cāṇakya in the opening line

² Some MSS. contain many stanzas which also occur in Vet. (cf. CM, p. 10), but all MSS. and editions contain a great number of stanzas which also occur in the Pañcatantra and the Hitopadeśa. Cf. CStP and CStH; the author found 200 and 164 Cāṇakya stanzas respectively in the Pañcatantra and the Hitopadeśa. He showed that aphorisms contained in the HJ 2.118, 121, 147 and 4.5 which formally formed the prefatory or concluding stanzas were reflected in the body of the story that follows, just as the animals around which the subsequent story was built were also the principal characters in the stanzas. He stated, for instance, in CStH that in HJ 2.119 the maxim ab reads: 'that which could not be accomplished by prowess may be affected by stratagem', while cd referred to the next tale dealing with the hen crow and the black serpent and reads: 'a hen crow by (means of) a gold chain caused a black serpent to be put to death'. Since these two lines originated in the P, the main source for the H, it can be also assumed that a compiler of some Cāṇakya aphorisms or a scribe included these lines at a date later than that of the P or the H. In these cases it was not the P or the H that 'borrowed' from Cāṇakya, but as it were, the opposite happened.

acknowledged that they had drawn upon ('taken from'—uddhṛta) different śāstra-s (nānāśāstra); this supports the inference that they were to a great extent compilations.¹ The fact however that the same maxims were found very often in one or another collection of maxims and, particularly, in more than one version of Cāṇakya's maxims seems to prove that the particular maxim was rightly attributed to Cāṇakya, though it does not prove that such a maxim, if found also in other sources of Sanskrit literature, was borrowed from the latter source; very often the opposite occurred.

9. Sometimes no direct 'borrowing' occurred, but the author or compiler of a collection of Cāṇakya maxims built around a well-known maxim a new one; ² sometimes from a short sūtra he formed a highly elaborated kāvya aphorism.³ Very often the collections contain new versions of previously known aphorisms or maxims, or combinations of two well-known aphorisms or maxims, e.g. the first two pāda-s from one and the third and fourth pāda-s from another aphorism or maxim.

10. It has been said before that collections of aphorisms and maxims attributed to Cāṇakya have become compilations of aphorisms from various sources gathered without any leading principle. This assumption leads to one further step, i.e. to the authorship of the collections. The general opinion of all authors on Indian literature was that, despite the tradition which accepted Cāṇakya as the author of collections known to exist under his name, 'it is absurd' to assume that they were really composed by Cāṇakya, the minister of Candragupta Maurya.¹ Such an assumption, other scholars wrote, should be excluded with certainty;² Cāṇakya was a name under which miscellaneous collections were passed.³ They were attributed to Cāṇakya in majorem gloriam.⁴ Most maxims dealing with polity, practical philosophy, and worldly wisdom were attributed to Cāṇakya—the hero of Indian tradition.⁵ But in reality there is no intrinsic reason for believing that the attribution of the various collections to Cāṇakya was due to any authority other than that of the compilers of the various collections.⁶ To enhance their own literary accomplishments, many Indian compilers attributed them in the introductory or concluding stanzas to Cāṇakya. J. van Manen made a thorough study of such initial and concluding stanzas and reached the conclusion that there was no justification whatsoever for such an attribution. He said: ¹

³ It occurred quite often in the CR version. Cf. also CKr., p. 35.

‘ In the various collections, one, two, three, four, and even five introductory verses are made to say that Cāṇakya is the real author. The words used vary in almost every collection. We find: Cāṇakyaena tu bhāṣitam, Cāṇakyaena svayaṃ proktam, Cāṇakyaena yathoditam, Cāṇakyaena prayujyate, clearly indicating . . . that the attribution is, in each case, due to the compilers of the saṃgrahas, but not traditionally authentic. The Bombay Vṛddha Cāṇakya has not even any mention of Cāṇakya in its three introductory ślokas, and the only occurrence of the name there is in the title and the chapter colophons. Not only that, but in several collections these introductory ślokas are evidently tautological, and, indeed, of the class which Weber in his collection characterizes as a Schreiberstück, writer’s learning. What to think, for instance, of the introduction to the Calcutta Bodhi Cāṇakya, where we find in four initial ślokas the repetition vaksye, saṃpravaksyāmi, pravaksyāmi? It is difficult to admit that an original poet or author would repeat himself in such a manner, but for a collator and syncretist the feat would be quite possible. What is the greatest common factor in all the introductory ślokas is not more than the ardha śloka: nānā-śāstrodhrtaṃ vaksye rājanītisamuccayam, which is a statement which tallies perfectly with the character of all these Nīti collections, and is also quite compatible with the extraordinary variety of contents of all of them. This half śloka is, indeed, found in some of the introductory ślokas as the first half and in others as the second, and it seems that everything else to be found in the introductions is mere embroidery, but cannot claim authenticity. That the compilers of various collections take great liberty with their introductions and concluding stanzas is clearly proven by the Gujerati and Marathi editions which begin with a specially composed śloka:

vṛddhacāṇakyagranthasya ṭikāṃ kurve subodhinīm sarvalokopakārāya bhāṣayā māharāṣṭrayā and bhāṣayā gurjarāṣṭrayā.

So also Kalee Krishen, who introduces the concluding śloka in his edition: yasya vijñānamātreṇa, etc. with the words “the conclusion by the author”. Author, here, can hardly mean Cāṇakya, but only the compiler of the collection.’

It seems that a part of the conclusions reached by J. van Manen, namely that the attribution of the name of Cāṇakya to the various collections known to exist under his name is not authentic, is, though certainly right, not very original. Yet, it is difficult to accept the view that ‘the lack of unanimity’ in the attribution of the authorship to Cāṇakya proves the non-authenticity of these collections. Even less can one accept the view that ‘it is difficult to admit that an original poet or author would repeat himself in such a manner, but for a collator and syncretist the feat would be quite possible’. It was possible to divide all the texts known to exist under the name of Cāṇakya into six versions.¹ Almost every version has different introductory stanzas which are often the characteristic feature of these different versions. This is the explanation for the differences occurring in the introductory stanzas and the variety of phrases mentioned by J. van Manen (Cāṇakyaena tu bhāṣitam, Cāṇakyaena svayaṃ proktam, Cāṇakyaena yathoditam, Cāṇakyaena prayujyate). It must also be noted that the closing stanza in Kalee Krishen’s edition is a closing stanza characteristic of a great number of editions in the CN version, and not just an addition made exclusively by Kalee Krishen.

11. It has been said before that, in order to increase the authority of their collections, the original compilers attributed them to Cāṇakya. The expression 'original compilers' is important, if we accept the principle of the six versions of Cāṇakya's compendia; in the old times¹ the versions, i.e. compilations of maxims and aphorisms from various sources, were established and became so to say petrified; new compilations followed the six patterns and if the compilers wanted to add new aphorisms they did so usually either at the end of the texts or at the end of the adhyāya-s.

12. J. van Manen held that the attribution of the collections to Cāṇakya was one of late origin and that the original nīti tradition was older than and independent from Cāṇakya's name and that perhaps the attribution was due to some 'bad' play of words rooted in the similarity between Cāṇakya and Śaunaka. He came to this conclusion because of 'the existence of various collections of what may be called Cāṇakya Nīti, in various parts of India without the name of Cāṇakya attached, but simply called Nītisāra or Nītisāstram, the occurrence of a Nītisāra in the Garuḍa-purāṇa in connection with the name of Śaunaka instead, the occurrence in the Tibetan Tanjur of four Nīti Saṃgrahas, one under the name of Cāṇakya, another under that of Nāgārjuna, and still another under the name of Masūrākṣa (and this one containing certain ślokas which are contained in nearly all Cāṇakya collections and nowhere else ascribed to another), and finally one under the name of Vararuci'.¹ In this connection, J. van Manen also pointed to the variations of the name Cāṇakya, namely Cānakya, Cānaka (characteristic of texts from Bengal and Nepal), Cāṇikya and Cāṇika (characteristic of those from Rajputana?), Cāṇākya and Cāṇākhyā (characteristic of those from the region of Bombay),² Cāṇāyākya, Cāṇṇāyaka and Caulāyaka. To this list such names as Cāṇakyā, Cāṇakyaya, Cāṇāka, Cānakhya, etc. could be added; they are found in various MSS. and editions of the so-called Cāṇakya aphorisms.

It is possible to agree with J. van Manen that the original nīti tradition is older than, and independent from, Cāṇakya's name, since we do not know when the various versions known to exist under the name of Cāṇakya became so to say petrified, but it is difficult to agree with him that it could be attributed to Śaunaka. All the arguments mentioned before lead to the conclusion that the so-called Cāṇakya collections were in majorem gloriam attributed to the Indian hero—Cāṇakya. E. Monseur rightly said: 'On dit dans l'Inde un Cāṇakya de la même façon qu'on dit en France un "Petit Buffon de l'Enfance" pour un ouvrage élémentaire

d'histoire naturelle.'¹ It may also be added that the collection of Cāṇakya's aphorisms found in the Tibetan Tanjur is a classical text of Cāṇakya's aphorisms belonging to the Cāṇakya-rāja-nīti version (CR), namely the CRT text; it was translated into Tibetan by the Indian Pandit Prabhākaraśrīmitra (Prabakasrimitra) and the Tibetan Bhikṣu Rin-chen bzañ-po of žhu hen (Ratnabhadra) in the tenth century A.D.² and that the Nītisāra of the Garuḍa-purāṇa is another text of the Cāṇakya-rāja-nīti-śāstra (CR) version.³

13. It is impossible to establish the extent to which the various aphorisms and maxims were formulated by an authority on polity or were part of popular poetry. O. Kressler said: 'Ohne Zweifel handelt es sich . . . bei der weitaus überwiegenden Mehrzahl der vorliegenden Strophen um sprachlich wie gedanklich ganz anspruchlose Volkspoese; die einzelnen, unter einander in keiner inneren Beziehung stehenden Sprüche gingen von Mund zu Mund, ohne von eigentlichen Dichtern herzustammen. Dass dann eine später veranstaltete Sammlung solcher Verse mehr oder weniger Contradictorisches bietet ist nahezu selbstverständlich.'⁴ M. Winternitz did not accept Kressler's theory and wrote:

shows in any case that it is wrong to say that ‘the great majority’ of aphorisms belong to popular poetry, the authorship of which cannot be traced. Some of the aphorisms certainly belong to this category, but form a definite minority.

The latter passage was first referred to by Brockhaus in a communication read in 1846 in the Königliche Sächsische Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Leipzig, entitled 'Über die gnomischen Dichter Südindiens'.² Later on, it was analysed more carefully by A. Weber in 1864.³ In 1873 it was referred to by J. Klatt who based the reference of this sentence on Weber's communication;⁴ in 1887 by E. Monseur,⁵ in 1906-7 by O. Kressler,⁶ in 1911 by E. prakaraṇa-s, was not composed of 6000 śloka-s, but much less; it is a work written in prose and not in śloka-s. Therefore opinions were expressed that 'no reasonable doubt is permissible that there was a time when the Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya was wholly composed of verses'.¹ On the other hand opinions were expressed that a śloka is composed of thirty-two syllables, thus Kauṭilya mentioned that his work was composed of 187·8 verses, approximately the number of verses found in reality in K. On the contrary, opinions were expressed that 6000 śloka-s are equal to 192,000 syllables and therefore the passage in the Daśakumāracarita mentioned above was considered as referring to the whole of Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra in prose.

This author does not intend to reopen the whole learned discussion on this subject; he does wish to emphasize, however, that despite the fact that the various Cāṇakya collections do not have a unitary character and deal in a great part with ethics they do, nevertheless, contain a large number of maxims and aphorisms of rāja-nīti character. It seems to this author that it is possible to extract from the numerous collections of Cāṇakya's sayings those maxims which normally would have been included in a versified rāja-nīti.

AIM OF THE STUDY

15. The aim of this study is to prepare a collection of Cāṇakya's maxims dealing with subjects which, as stated above, would normally be included in a treatise on rāja-nīti. This new collection of maxims attributed to Cāṇakya is not an attempt to prepare an ur-text of Kautilya's Arthaśāstra in a versified form, but a compilation of Cāṇakya's maxims and aphorisms dealing with rāja-nīti, arranged in a logical order according to subject matter. The preparation of such a text seems to be quite important, since these verses were undoubtedly, rightly or wrongly, attributed in texts and tradition to Cāṇakya—Kautilya.

After having quoted the introductory stanzas (1-4) which show the rāja-nīti character of the various collections of Cāṇakya maxims,¹ those maxims which could be grouped into one of the following chapters are included: king's duties and qualities; king's friends and enemies; war, peace, alliances and stratagem to be used by the king; king's officials; and king's subjects. Other maxims of a rāja-nīti character which could not be included in one of these chapters are grouped at the end in the chapter called 'Varia'.

In the first sub-division the main duties and qualities of the king (5-18) (they are familiar to the leading Dharma- and Artha-śāstra-s), maxims dealing with the duty of the king to rule in accordance with dharma, to protect the subjects, and the main virtues of the king are quoted.

In the sub-division 'good and bad king' (19-25), maxims dealing in general terms with a good and a bad king are included.

The following five sub-divisions cite maxims dealing with particular duties of the king, namely governing the kingdom with justice (26-33), protection of the king's subjects (34-42), collection of the treasure in a legal manner (43-74), respect for knowledge and learning (75-80),¹ and other less important duties of the king (81-98).

In the next two sub-divisions maxims dealing with governing the kingdom (99-106), in particular by danḍa and the reasons for non-inhabitation of, or for leaving, a kingdom which is devoid of essential living conditions (107-16) are included.

In the next chapter, the first sub-division, maxims dealing in general with the characteristics of friends and enemies, and advice not to trust even the smallest and the seemingly unimportant enemy (117-28)² are incorporated.

Maxims dealing with the use of ruse and stratagem by the king (129-54) are placed in the second sub-division of this chapter; these maxims are typical of the so-called Kauṭilyanism, or Machiavellism; many of these maxims are of a general character, but are considered as particularly useful for kings in order to govern their kingdom properly and for the benefit of their subjects. (It is worthwhile to compare these maxims with the highly ethical ones found in the chapter on king's duties, in particular the sub-division: 'main duties and qualities of the king'.)

¹ This sub-division could be enlarged, since many maxims connected with this subject exist.

² This division could also be enlarged; many maxims deal with friends in particular.

The last sub-division of this chapter cites stanzas dealing with various subject matters (155-65), in particular the army, the fortress and the conduct of war.

The next chapter entitled 'King's Officials' is very characteristic of the Artha- and Nīti-śāstra-s and is similar to the contents on the subject of Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra, Kāmandaki's Nītisāra, etc.

The first two sub-divisions deal in general with service in the king's court from the point of view of the king's officials (166-81) and of the king (182-95).¹

The next sub-division contains maxims, or more properly said Arthaśāstra-rules, about king's officials, their testing, their qualities (196-215) and their discharge (216-18).

The last sub-division in this chapter quotes maxims, or better to say Arthaśāstra-rules, dealing with the highest officials and ministers of the king; their qualifications and duties; this part (219-36) could be rightly considered as an Arthaśāstra treatise on the king's.

highest officials. It gives a description of the duties and qualities of the Superintendent of Justice (dharmādhyakṣa), the Treasurer (bhāṇḍādhyakṣa), the Superintendent of Mines (gañjādhyakṣa), the Commander-in-Chief (senādhyakṣa), the Superintendent of Horses (aśvādhyakṣa), the Royal Doorkeeper (pratīhāra), the Royal Counsellor (mantrin), the Royal Secretary (lekha), the Royal Physician (vaidya), the Royal Priest (purohita), the Royal Teacher (ācārya), the Royal Astrologer (kālajña), the Custodian of the King's Inner Apartments (rājāntahpura-rakṣaka), the Royal Cook (sūpakāra), and the Royal Ambassador (dūta). It may be remarked in this connection that Cāṇakya's maxims are not very familiar with the technical terms for the highest officials of the king used in the Arthaśāstra-s; and so, the dharmādhyakṣa is in some texts also referred to as senādhyakṣa, rājādhyakṣa or kośādhyakṣa; the bhāṇḍādhyakṣa is called in some texts also kośādhyakṣa, senādhyakṣa or even dharmādhyakṣa; the gañjādhyakṣa is also named in some texts gajādhyakṣa; and the senādhyakṣa is in some texts referred to as aśvādhyakṣa, while the aśvādhyakṣa is called in some texts senādhyakṣa or even dharmādhyakṣa.

The next short chapter entitled 'King's Subjects' (237-44) contains maxims dealing in general with the behaviour of the king's subjects towards the king and vice versa. Particularly interesting are the maxims saying that the subjects are powerless against the king since they cannot resort to redress, even if he misbehaves (240-1).

The last chapter entitled 'Varia' (245-76) gives maxims which could not be properly included in any of the five chapters described above though dealing with rāja-nīti, such as the king as the ornament of the earth, advice not to trust him or his family, etc.

In order to illustrate better the subject matter dealt with in the text a short résumé in English of each maxim or a group of maxims is given below. In a few cases where it was felt that the maxim had a peculiar bearing on rāja-nīti in a versified Arthaśāstra, a full translation has been given.

I. 1-4. INTRODUCTORY STANZAS

II. KING'S DUTIES AND QUALITIES

Main Duties and Qualities of the King

5. The king should curb his senses and dedicate himself to the service of dharma and the well-being of his subjects.

6. The king should rule by dharma, and protect his subjects.

7. The king should protect religion; where the syllable om is spread, the king's power is enlarged.

8. The king should act as protector, refuge for the destitute and should set right the addicted, protect the frightened, be a friend to all, benefactor, teacher, father, mother, brother, etc.

9. To punish the wicked; to reward the good; to increase the treasure by proper means; impartiality; and taking care of the government are the five sacred duties of the king.

10. Distribution of wealth to the deserving; appreciation of merits; enjoyment of life with his family and dependents; knowledge of Śāstra-s; and prowess in warfare are the five characteristics of the king.

11-8. Virtues of the king to be learnt from the lion, the crane, the cock, the crow, the dog, and the donkey.

Good and Bad King

19. A good king is like a gardener who replants the uprooted trees; strengthens the weak ones; bends down those which shoot too high; weakens the too strong ones; divides the united; and trims the thorny ones.

20. A king who follows the right path is happy.

21. A king should know the qualities which lead to prosperity.

22. A thriftless spender, a helpless (king), a quarrelsome (king), and a sick (king) perish.

23. The king should govern his country well; it is better to be without a king than to have a bad one.

24. There is no happiness in a kingdom ruled by a bad king.

25. Kings are like serpents; but they can be managed by good counsel.

Governing in accordance with Dharma

26. There is no safety in a misruled kingdom.

27. The king is the source of dharma.

28. The king should rule in accordance with his own dharma; otherwise he perishes.

29. The kingdom is the fruit of dharma.

30. The king should always protect the welfare of his kingdom and, after having vanquished his enemy's army, should govern with justice.

31. The king should be just: an unjust and groundless chastisement of his servant often leads to retaliation.

32. There is no wonder that a king versed in daṇḍanīti is just.

33. A just king is firm.

Protection of His Subjects

34. The kingdom is protected by the king.

35-6. The duty of the king is to protect his subjects.

37. Pure is the king who protects his subjects.

38-40. The king is the refuge for the weak and the poor; protector of the aged, children, ascetics; and redresser of the wronged.

41. The wife of the king is like one's own mother.

42. Subjects leave the king who cannot protect them.

Collection of the King's Treasury

43. The king should collect the treasure according to dharma (and protect the Brāhmaṇa-s).

44. The treasury should be kept full; even ascetics store (for a needy day).

45-7. Wealth is of short duration.

48. Wealth is the friend of the king in the negotiation of peace, in war, for bribery, etc.

49-64. One who has wealth has everything, while those deprived of it are lost.

65. The king should collect the treasure like a gardener plucking flowers without uprooting the plants.

66-8. The king should collect the treasure like a milkman without injuring the cow's udder or exhausting the cow, or injuring her offspring.

69. The king should collect the treasure like a bee which does not injure the flower.

70. Like an ant-hill, honeycomb, and moon in the bright fortnight, the king's treasury becomes bigger and bigger, little by little.

71-2. The king desires wealth (treasure).

73. The king is doomed if he touches the Brāhmaṇa's wealth.

74. The king should spend money from the treasury on needy persons.

Respect for Knowledge and Learning

75-6. The king should respect learning and knowledge.

77-8. The king is honoured in his own kingdom, but the learned man is honoured everywhere.

79. Better a blind king than one deprived of knowledge.

80. A thought of a wise man can destroy the kingdom.

Other Duties

81. The king should protect in accordance with Arthaśāstra.

82-4. The king should preserve self-control and should remain unaffected in prosperity and adversity.

85-7. The king should be gentle, truthful and well-disposed towards his servants, subjects and Brāhmaṇa-s and not be fickle in his dealings.

88-90. The king should have contacts only with good and not with bad men.

91. The king should distinguish friend from foe; an indifferent person from a neutral; an old man from a teacher.

92. The king should move about in his kingdom; only then will he be esteemed.

93. The king should not be stingy.

94. The king should not devote himself to amusement and pleasure.

95. The king should not be addicted to dice, hunting, women, drink, aimless wandering, or sleep.

96. The king should not change the established law by argument.

97. The king who is pleasure-seeking, proud of his wealth and subordinates could easily be conquered by his enemies.

98. The king should not be contented.

Governing the Kingdom

99. The king rules by punishment (daṇḍa).

100. By the threat of punishment the whole world is kept in check; through fear of punishment the universe enjoys blessings.

101. The kingdom in the grip of anarchy (without a king) should be pitied.

102. Blessed are those who do not see the downfall of their own kingdom.

103-4. The kingdom can be regained; but not one's body.

105. A sacrifice without giving food destroys the kingdom.

106. If there are no villages, boundaries do not exist.

Essential Living Conditions in a Kingdom

107. A kingdom should not be inhabited where there is not a wealthy man, a Brāhmaṇa versed in the Veda-s, a king, a river, and a physician;

108. where means of earning one's livelihood, security, sense of shame, proper behaviour, and charity are not found;

109. where respect, means of earning one's livelihood, relatives, and opportunity for gaining knowledge do not exist;

110-1. and where there is no leader, where the leadership is vested in more than one responsible person, or which is governed by a woman or a child.

112. One should live where respect exists.

113-6. A bad country should be abandoned.

III. KING'S FRIENDS, ENEMIES, WAR, PEACE, ALLIANCES, STRATAGEM

Friends and Enemies

117. A friend is one who stands by in times of illness, in adversity, in case of famine, in war, at a king's door, and at the burial place.

118. Friends who speak sweetly in one's presence and slander behind one's back should be avoided.

119. Alliance with friends leads to prosperity for the king.

120. Good qualities, even of an enemy, should be recognized.

121. One who trusts an enemy is doomed.

122. Confidence should never be placed in an enemy even after reconciliation.

123-4. A man who does not trust us should not be trusted; even a man who trusts us should not be trusted too much.

125. An enemy should be overcome completely, because like a fire he can become strong again.

126-7. An enemy, however weak he may be, should not be disregarded: he may prove dangerous like a spark of fire destroying a forest or a stack of hay.

128. Even offsprings of an enemy should not be spared: they could prove to be dangerous.

Use of Stratagem

129. The king should use ruse: what cannot be gained by force can be gained by ruse.

130. One should not always be too straightforward: in a forest straight trees are cut down, while the crooked ones are left standing.

131-3. The king should use only sweet speech: in this way he will secure friends.

134-6. The king should overcome the enemy by every means in his power: whether it be by peace or concession; or by sowing dissension; or by invasion; or by show of strength. The help of another enemy who is under obligation to the king should also be used for this purpose.

137. An enemy, gentle or violent, should be overcome by gentle means.

138-9. An enemy can be overcome by unity.

140. The king threatened with the possibility of losing wealth or life, should bend low before an enemy in order to save his own life.

141. According to time and circumstances a king should make alliance with an enemy or wage war with friends.

142. One should carry an enemy on one's own shoulders as long as the time is adverse, but break him at the right time.

143-4. The enemy should not know the weaknesses of the king, but the king should know the weaknesses of his enemy.

145. Weak points of an enemy should be investigated, while one's own weak points should be concealed.

146. The king should conclude peace for six months or for one year and after having recouped his losses should destroy the enemy.

147-9. In case of distress the king should conclude alliances with anybody.

150. One should not conclude an alliance for position or wealth.

151. The king should win over a covetous man by means of money; a proud man by folded palms; a fool by humouring him; a wise man by truthfulness.

152. The king should win over a great man by subservience; a valiant man by using his own friends; a vulgar one by giving small gifts; a person of the same status by courage.

153. Rules that are ruthless, a teacher without knowledge, a wife with a temper, and relatives who have no affection should be abandoned.

154. One should forsake an individual for the sake of the family; the family for the village; the village for the country; the whole world for the ātman.

Varia

* 155-6. The king's strength is in the army.

157-9. The army and the king are ruined if there is no commander-in-chief.

160. The king should avoid the crossing (with the army) of a great river; enmity with a great man; and strife with many people.

161. The king should supply the fortress well.

162. One should be courageous before an enemy.

163. Safe are those who run away from a foreign invasion.

164. Soldiers are praised after their return from battle.

165. Kṣatriya-s who are afraid in battle will never go to heaven.

IV. KING'S OFFICIALS

Service in the King's Court from the Point of View of the Officials

166. One should not pass between the master and his servant.

167. One who seeks honour should serve the king.

168. To serve the king is honourable.

169. An unimportant person becomes important if he serves the king.

170-2. Serving the king is not very profitable, though king's officials are honoured with gifts and rewards.

173. The king's officials should always be cheerful, sweet of speech, but firm in decision.

174. The king's officials should be bold in the discharge of public duties.

175-7. Service under a wicked king is a constant worry.

178. A Brāhmaṇa is ruined by serving a king.

179. Old servants should be esteemed.

180. One should avoid masters who are cruel; and more so miserly masters; even more so indiscriminating masters; and most of all thankless masters.

181. Officials (ministers) abandon a fallen king.
No confidence can be placed in royalty. (cf. 267)

Service in the King's Court from the Point of View of the King

182. The ornaments of the king are his officials.

183. The king needs officials (assistants): no undertaking without an official succeeds.

184-7. Without his officials (ministers) a king perishes.

188-9. Whatever is done by the officials affects the king, good or bad.

190. The king is ruined by bad counsel.

191-3. A bad official (minister) brings ruin to the king.

194. Life is miserable for the king who has an official contradicting him.

195. Kings guided by cunning ministers will not be served by wise men.

Choice of King's Officials

196-7. There are three kinds of king's officials: excellent, bad, and mediocre; they are to be assigned duties suited to their capacities.

198. It is difficult to find officials who are not lazy; who are fully contented; who are vigilant; who are alike in times of joy and grief; and who are courageous.

199-200. The king's officials are tested like gold.

201. The value of officials is to be known when they are discharging their duties.

202. Between a villain and a snake, the latter is preferable; the snake bites from time to time, while a villain is always dangerous.

203. The king should choose men of high descent: they will never be disloyal to him.

204. At the time of deluge the oceans are said to exceed their limits, but good people will never do so.

205. A single wise man is preferred to a thousand fools.

206. The king should employ a man of good qualities, and avoid one who is without them; in a wise man one finds all good qualities, while in a fool faults only.

207. The king's officials should be dignified, polite in speech, self-restrained, truthful, and endowed with clear vision and insight.

208. If the king employs a wise man, he brings honour, wealth, and heaven.

209. If the king employs a fool, he brings dishonour, loss of wealth, and hell.

210. Therefore, the king should employ persons of good qualities in order to promote dharma, artha and kāma.

211. The king should avoid employing persons who are fraudulent, dishonest, cruel, without zeal, incompetent, and cowardly.

212. The king should avoid employing persons without patience and devotion; who are adversaries; who are greedy; who are weak; and who are extremely cowardly.

213. One who is cruel, who has bad inclinations, who is greedy, timid, and too candid, who is not engaged in collecting money, yet spends lavishly, is unfit to be employed.

214. One should not keep company with a fool: he is like a beast with two feet. Like a thorn he pierces the heart imperceptibly with sharp words.

215. A large number of fools who live like cattle hide the good qualities of others, just as the cloud hides the sun.

Discharge of King's Officials

216. The king who does not destroy his official who is equal to him in wealth, ability, statesmanship, and industry, and has taken away half of his kingdom, will be destroyed by him.

217. A bad minister should be expelled completely just as a bad tooth is extracted with the root.

218. The king should expel a sluggish, talkative, stupid, cruel, addicted, perfidious, discontented, or disloyal official.

Ministers and High Officials

219. Dharmādhyakṣa (Superintendent of Justice) should be of high family, noble conduct, great wisdom, of keen insight in the dispensation of justice, and endowed with all virtues.

220. Bhāṇḍādhyakṣa (The Treasurer) should be concerned with the increase of the treasure, should know the value of gems, should be faithful in his conduct, and energetic.

221. Gaṇjādhyakṣa (Superintendent of Mines) should be experienced, devoted to the king, truthful, self-controlled, not greedy, and contented with his own wealth.

222. Senādhyakṣa (Commander-in-Chief) should be well versed in military science, be indefatigable, and have courage and valour.

223. Aśvādhyakṣa (Superintendent of Horses) should know the science of horses, be unsurpassed in horsemanship, and possess exceptional courage and strength.

224. Pratīhāra (Royal Door-keeper) should be able to understand hints, be strong in body, good-looking, vigilant, and skilful.

225. Mantrin (Royal Counsellor) should be quick in action, should have a good memory, be thankful, should be versed in the Nītiśāstra, intelligent, and should have a keen foresight.

226-7. Lekhaka (Royal Secretary) should have quick grasping-power, should be wise, truthful, master of his own senses, should write quickly and in a clear hand, and should have studied all the arts and sciences.

228. Vaidya (Royal Physician) should be well versed in the Āyurveda, be of amiable appearance, and should possess a noble character and good qualities.

229. Purohita (Royal Priest) should be well versed in the Veda-s and Vedāṅga-s, ever offering prayers and sacrifices to God, and always ready to bless.

230. Ācārya (Royal Teacher) should be well versed in religious and secular teaching, should speak amiably, should be master of his own senses, capable of teaching well, and should be morally pure.

231-2. Kālaṇḍī (Royal Astrologer) should know the art of writing and reading, arithmetic, teaching, and employing the formulae relating to stars. A Brāhmaṇa who knows the same arts is honoured like a god.

233. Antaḥpura-rakṣaka (Custodian of King's Inner Apartments) should be lame, hunch-backed, dull-witted, old, incapable (of having sexual intercourse), of subdued passions, and free from desires.

234. Sūpakāra (Royal Cook) should have good qualities inherited from father and grandfather, should know the śāstra and methods of preparing tasty food, and be truthful and clean.

235-6. Dūta (Royal Ambassador) should be intelligent, eloquent, clever, courageous, capable of reading the thoughts of others and conveying messages correctly.

V. KING'S SUBJECTS

237. The subjects of the king should obey his orders; disobeying his words is like killing him.

238. The king speaks only once.

239. The king should not be like his subjects; but the subjects should be like a good king.

240-1. Subjects are powerless against a king, since they cannot resort to redress.

242. Subjects are guided by the king: if he is virtuous, then his subjects are virtuous; if he is wicked, then his subjects are wicked; if he is mediocre, then his subjects are mediocre; as the king, so his subjects.

243. The king is responsible for the harm befalling his subjects and the purohita for the harm befalling the king.

244. Where the king is like a lion; where the king's ministers are like tigers; where the king's officials are like vultures; the king's subjects are ruined.

VI. VARIA

245. The king is the ornament of the earth.

246. Even though a child, the king should not be despised, as if he were a mere mortal; for he is a great divinity in human form.

247-8. Kings desire their kingdoms for one reason only: that their commands are never frustrated.

249. Authority is the only aim of the king.

250. The king should not be a descendant of a low family.

251-2. The king looks at the world through the eyes of niti; he sees the world through the eyes of his spies.

253. The king's luck is not limitless: God has not imparted everything to one person.

254. God can make a beggar out of a king and a king out of a beggar.

255-6. The king is never to be disturbed (while sleeping); the treasurer and the door-keeper should ever be vigilant.

257. Hatred towards the king brings disaster.

258. Kings live in towns; low-class people in villages; Piśāca-s between the villages; and Rākṣasa-s on burial grounds (in the centre of the village).

259. Polite manners can be learnt from princes.

260. Kings have no feelings for others.

261-5. Kings are not the friends of anyone; there should be no friendship with kings.

266. No one should believe the king.

267-71. Kings and kings' families should not be trusted; dealings with kings should be cautious; kings may be destructive.

272. Too close a relationship with kings is dangerous; too distant a relationship is not profitable; a middle path should be followed.

273. Favours from kings are desired for the sake of assisting friends and destroying enemies.

274. Favours of kings are like a shadow; they are obtained with difficulty.

275-6. Kings should not be approached empty-handed; if they are left empty-handed the object will never be fulfilled.

TEXTS USED

16. It is an established fact that there is a great amount and variety of Cāṇakya MSS. Aufrecht's Catalogus Catalogorum, which has become obsolete by now, alone mentioned some fifty MSS. Since then many other MSS., particularly in India, have been discovered.

The number of editions of Cāṇakya's aphorisms and maxims is immense. No one knows how many of them have been issued,¹ the more so as many served in India for popular, rather than scholarly purposes, many were used as textbooks for teaching Sanskrit, and many were selections from well-known Cāṇakya versions, abridged editions of Cāṇakya versions, arbitrarily modified by editors and often so changed that their model could not be recognized any more. The editors of some Cāṇakya editions considered their work as compilations of Subhāṣita-saṃgraha-s based on Cāṇakya aphorisms and maxims; this means that the basis was one or another edition of so-called Cāṇakya aphorisms and maxims which was arbitrarily expurgated and to which the editor had added a number of well-known aphorisms and maxims from other sources or well-known sayings transmitted orally, which he liked or thought that his readers would like. These particular editions are from the critical standpoint worthless.² They mostly appeared in Bengal, in Bengali characters and were based on an aṣṭottaraśata collection of Cāṇakya's aphorisms (CN version).

¹ cf. The Delhi Public Library: An Evaluation Report by Frank M. Gardner, UNESCO Public Library Manuals 8, Paris, UNESCO, 1957. It is said there that book selection in the vernaculars is difficult for the staff of the Delhi Public Library because of the disorganized book trade, the lack of standard lists of publishers' output and the lack of adequate reviews.

² E. Bartoli called them deminutio capitis of the celebrated Cāṇakya (CNF, p. ii).

The Catalogue of the India Office in London¹ which lists Cāṇakya editions published until 1929 registered ninety-eight editions of Cāṇakya texts. This Catalogue is far from complete. And how many editions appeared after 1929? It is clear, therefore, that it is completely impossible to study and analyse all the Cāṇakya editions.²

17. This author has collected and studied one hundred and fifty-nine Cāṇakya editions and analysed ninety-four of them; in addition he has studied seventy-four MSS. and analysed forty-eight of them; of these MSS. over forty have never been studied or described before.

On the basis of the analysis of this vast amount of raw material, the author in 1956 divided all the texts of collections of Cāṇakya maxims into six versions,³ namely the Vṛddha Cāṇakya, textus ornator (CV), the Vṛddha Cāṇakya, textus simplicior (Cv), the Cāṇakya-rāja-nīti-śāstra (CR), the Cāṇakya-nīti-śāstra (CN), the Cāṇakya-sāra-saṃgraha (CS) and the Laghu Cāṇakya (CL).⁴

² I spent several days in the India Office Library in London but many of the editions mentioned in the Catalogue, unfortunately, could not be found.

³ Akten des XXIV Internationalen Orientalisten Kongresses, München, pp. 544-6. The basis of the division into six versions is also given there.

⁴ The reconstructed texts of these six versions are being published by the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute under 18. All the texts available to the author contain two thousand four hundred and thirty-eight different maxims. Not all of them have been incorporated in the six versions mentioned above. Far from it! Only maxims which appeared in at least three texts of the same version and were clearly not interpolations were included in one or other of these six versions.

In this study, however, all the 2438 different maxims and aphorisms were analysed and those having a rāja-nīti background have been included. Not all of them are rāja-nīti stanzas; the Cāṇakya maxims are mostly ethical and moral and include kāvya aphorisms dealing at the same time with several 'similar' problems; sometimes one part, often very small, deals with rāja-nīti; sometimes a moral stanza is of a general character and does not refer exclusively to kings; however, where it was felt that such a maxim or maxims, though in a small way, may contribute to the understanding of rāja-nīti, they have been included in this study. On the other hand stanzas though found in one or more collections of Cāṇakya aphorisms, but which were considered as interpolations have not been included.

The texts used for the preparation of this study are referred to in the 'Abbreviations'. The full the editorship of Prof. Vishva Bandhu Shastri and the first part containing the CV and Cv versions will appear shortly. For details see Abbreviations under Cr.

description of each text is found in the reconstructed text of the six versions mentioned above.¹

PRESENTATION OF THE TEXT

19. Directly below the heading in English, the Sanskrit text of the Cāṇakya maxims has been given. A résumé in English of each maxim (or group of maxims dealing with the same subject matter) is given in paragraph 15 above. If the maxim appeared in more than one version of Cāṇakya's aphorisms, the reconstructed text which seemed to be the best has been chosen.²

In the first paragraph of the footnotes which follow each maxim the sources have been quoted; first the number of the reconstructed maxim of the appropriate version, as being published in the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute; secondly other Cāṇakya sources have been mentioned; the first two letters, CV, Cv, CR, CS, CN, CL (they are followed by another letter or letters) characterize the version. The letters Cn refer to texts which are connected with the CN version but have an appearance of notebooks of students of Sanskrit written probably by children or adolescents and do not merit any special attention. If any maxim included in this study does not appear in the reconstructed text of the six versions, the text in which it is found has been referred to. In the second paragraph of the footnotes other sources, such as the epics, Purāṇa-s, kathā or kāvya literature, as well as the main Subhāṣita-saṃgraha-s in which the respective maxim could be traced have also been given. Obviously, this enumeration of other sources is not exhaustive. This is followed by variants of the maxim. In some cases, after these variants some special remarks as to the authenticity of the respective maxim or the metre (only metres other than anuṣṭubh śloka) have been mentioned.

ANALYSIS OF THE TEXT

20. The analysis of the maxims used in this text shows that two hundred and seventy-six stanzas of various collections of Cāṇakya maxims have a rāja-nīti background, most of which are found in the Cāṇakya-rāja-nīti-śāstra version (CR), namely one hundred and thirty-two; ¹ thirty-four of them are not found in the reconstructed text of the CR version but only in some texts of this version. Almost the whole of the fourth and fifth adhyāya-s of the CR version deal with matters connected with rāja-nīti, while not a single stanza of the sixth adhyāya of CR is connected with rāja-nīti.

The second most important version which deals with rāja-nīti is the Cāṇakya-sāra-saṃgraha (CS) version with ninety-six stanzas,¹ or almost one-third of the whole version.² Nearly all stanzas of the first śataka between 52 and 76, in the second śataka between 1 and 32, and in the third śataka between 49 and 69 deal with rāja-nīti.

The Vṛddha Cāṇakya, textus ornatior (CV) and the Vṛddha Cāṇakya, textus simplicior (Cv) contain seventy-one and fifty-five maxims respectively dealing with rāja-nīti;³ they are found in the first adhyāya of the CV and Cv versions, in the fourth and fifth adhyāya-s of the Cv version and the sixth adhyāya of the CV version. Since both these versions are interrelated only one table for both these versions has been prepared.⁴

In the reconstructed Cāṇakya-nīti-śāstra version (CN), we find forty-two maxims dealing with rāja-nīti; this number is relatively high, since this version is an aṣṭottaraśata (i.e. contains 108 stanzas). In addition eighty-four maxims of rājanīti character are found in some texts which belong mostly to the longer texts of the CN version. These texts are not representative of 'genuine' Cāṇakya aphorisms.⁵

² This version is composed of three śataka-s.

³ These figures contain one and ten maxims respectively found in some MSS. only of the CV and Cv versions; two and three maxims respectively are not found in the reconstructed texts of the CV and Cv versions.

⁵ cf. Introduction to CN.

The Laghu Cāṇakya version (CL) contains only a small number of maxims dealing with rāja-nīti, namely fifteen.

21. The following table gives a better picture for the analysis of the maxims and aphorisms included in this study. The figures in italics denote that the maxim included in this study is found only in some texts of the appropriate version; × denotes that the maxim is found only in some texts but not in the reconstructed text of that version; Crn denotes the number of maxims found in the second part of the present study. Whenever there is no space available in the table for denoting the various individual texts in which the maxim is found, it is enumerated in the footnotes to the table.
